Redlands Mayor Karen Williams.

Housing proposal just for sardines

Hayden Johnson

A state-imposed housing strategy to shrink the size of blocks could allow residents to "pass toilet paper to their neighbour through the bathroom window" and turn one of the state's fastest-growing areas into a sardine city, Redlands Mayor Karen Williams warns.

Redland City Council will on Wednesday consider how to implement the state government's housing strategy, which proposes 100,000 new lots and 250,000 people by 2046 - despite its draft SEQ regional plan only forecasting an extra 50,300 people in Redlands.

Under the plan, low-density residential lots in Cleveland, Mt Cotton, Redland Bay, Thornlands and Victoria Point larger than 600 sqm can be split into multiple 200 sqm lots, according to the plan.

"This isn't just a glossy document, it's Labor's plan to more than double our population and turn Redlands Coast into a sardine city," Ms Williams said.

"It'll be the death of the backyard in the Redlands and, in turn, the death of the backyard for our entire region.

"People don't want to be able to pass toilet paper to their neighbour through the bathroom window."

Ms Williams has requested consultation on the Redlands Housing Strategy be extended due to the "significant impacts" it would have on the city.

"People living in areas like Mt Cotton village and Redland Bay could end up with three or four homes next door where there is currently one," she said. "Without better public transport, this would have a diabolic impact on our road network and lifestyle with people spending more time in congestion than in their home."

Toondah decision on way

Environment Minister Tanya Plibersek will determine the fate of the controversial $3bn Toondah Harbour project after final environmental studies were sent for approval. Walker Corporation on Tuesday submitted its environmental impact statement to Ms Plibersek for her decision within 40 business days, a timeframe which could be extended. Toondah Harbour at Cleveland secured state government support earlier this year and would include a 3000-apartment complex and marina. Critics of the development have raised concerns about its effect on local birdlife populations and construction in a RAMSAR wetland area. If Ms Plibersek approves the development, the first sod could be turned on the project by 2025.
